WORRIED ABOUT YOUR MEDICARE DRUG COSTS?
Information About Medicare Part D and Your Diabetes

Why Are Your Out-of-Pocket Drug Costs Changing?

If you are enrolled in Medicare Part D, you may have noticed that your out-of-pocket costs for the same drug from the same pharmacy may change from month-to-month.

Your exact costs will depend on the Medicare Part D plan you choose:

- It is important to carefully compare plans in your area when selecting coverage because the medications covered may change each year.
- Premiums, deductibles, covered medications, and co-pay amounts vary between plans.

Medicare Part D has different phases. Each of these phases may come with different out-of-pocket costs, which dictates what you pay when you pick up your drug from the pharmacy:\(^1,^2\)

- For example, you may or may not have an initial deductible, which will not be more than $445.
- In the next phase, you may have cost-sharing responsibilities based on the plan you select.
- Next, you may encounter the coverage gap. In this phase, you may be responsible for 25% of your drug’s cost.
- In the final phase, you will be responsible for 5% of your drug’s cost.
For lower-income Medicare beneficiaries, there is a support program called Extra Help, which can help you pay for your medicine and avoid the coverage gap.3

Even if you don’t qualify for full Extra Help, you may qualify for partial Extra Help based on your income and assets.1 Just like full Extra Help, partial Extra Help can help you pay for your medicine.1

CMS has launched the Part D Senior Savings Model for calendar year 2021. Under the program, participating plans may lower beneficiaries’ out-of-pocket costs for certain types of insulin to a maximum of $35 copay per 30-day’s supply in the deductible, initial coverage, and coverage gap phases of the Part D benefit. Part D beneficiaries should refer to the Medicare Plan Finder on Medicare.gov during Open Enrollment for more information.
